PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

THIS edition of Dr. Smith's "Smaller Latin-English Dictionary," while carefully preserving those distinctive features which have secured for it so wide an acceptance, is to a great extent a new and original Work.

In its previous form, the Smaller Dictionary was simply an abridgment of the larger Work. In the preparation of the new edition, every article has been carefully revised, with the express object of meeting the requirements of younger students. A comparison of the two editions will show that this aim has been steadily kept in view. The improvements introduced will be found to fall mainly under the following heads:—

1. A much larger number of the examples given are actually translated—not in every case in full, but so far as the particular point in question is concerned. Experienced teachers have found that a mere collection of Latin examples, however appositely chosen, is useless to young students; whereas a judicious interspersion of translation encourages them to make a more adequate use of the Dictionary, and to pay attention to the different applications of words. In this way too, the Dictionary becomes a school of translation, the student being not unfrequently supplied with equivalent English words or phrases, fitting closer both to the form and the spirit of the Latin than any that might have occurred to himself. In order to develop this feature of the Work without seriously adding to its bulk, very many of the citations have been curtailed, and others which seemed superfluous have been omitted. The shorter the citation—provided it be intelligible—the more readily is its immediate bearing apprehended.

PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

2. Many articles have been re-cast, and not a few entirely re-written; partly with the object of securing more perfect accuracy in the explanations of words, and partly in order to present a simpler and clearer view of the development of their different senses. Among many such instances may be mentioned, acervalis, acervus, acies, aduro, auctoritas, cervix, clepsydra, consultus, emolumentum, emunctus, ferox, ferocia, ferocitas, gena, homullus, homuncio, instrumentum, insomnium, inbitia, nam, neve, oppido, perstringo, prosa, provisio, remissio, respectus, refert, salutatio, sui, sum, ut, veritas.

In several of these, it is hoped, some positive contribution has been made towards a more perfect elucidation of the meaning and uses of words than was to be found in any previously existing Latin-English Dictionary.

3. All the etymological articles have been revised, and the greater part of them re-written, by J. K. Ingram, LL.D., Fellow and Librarian of Trinity College, Dublin; who has also contributed important corrections to the other parts of the work.

Only such etymological matter has been given as junior students could be expected really to understand and appropriate; much that would be desirable, or even necessary, in a work intended for more mature students, has therefore been omitted. The great object kept in view has been to train young minds to recognize the reign of law in Etymology: opinions will always differ as to the derivations of particular words; but it is most important to accustom the student to a strict observance of the established principles of letter-changes. It is believed that the Dictionary, in its present form, will be found, with respect to this species of scientific correctness, to bear a favourable comparison with any previous work of the same kind.

When the derivation of a word is such as to be seen at a glance, the etymology is given at the beginning of the article thus—effusus, a, um, Part. [effundo]. Where a fuller treatment is necessary, the convenience of the student has been usually consulted by placing the etymological observations at the end of the article.

PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION.

The derivations of words in the Romance languages from the Latin have been noted, as in former editions, the habit of considering these derivations being found to have a marked effect in cultivating an 'etymological sense' in young students. Many corrections have been made in this part of the work, and the number of such derivations has been considerably increased.

4. Very great care has been taken to ensure accuracy in the quantities. It is scarcely to be hoped that all errors have been excluded, and should any be discovered by students and others making use of the book, the editors would thankfully receive information of such. Considerable difficulty is often caused by the position of vowels naturally short before such combinations as cr, pr, tr, &c. In such cases the vowel will be found to be for the most part marked doubtful, on the ground of analogy; even though an example of each quantity may not in every case be found. In some cases such a consensus exists for one particular quantity, that it has seemed best to give that only. Final syllables have been left for the most part unmarked—as being determinable by the ordinary grammatical rules—unless something seemed to render a definition of quantity specially desirable.

Syllables other than final left unmarked (excepting such as are determined by position) must be regarded as of unknown quantity. In this category are many Proper Names; neither having found their way into verse nor having their quantities determined by their orthography in a Greek form.

5. All modes of spelling Latin words which have been decisively shewn to be erroneous have been rejected. Thus we write cælum, not coelum; condicio, not conditio; tribunicius, adventicius, not tribunitius, &c. On the other hand, the traditional orthography has been preserved in various cases in which, while inferior in strict accuracy, it has yet a solid basis of authority. Thus it has not been thought desirable—especially in a work intended for younger students—to abandon the recently accepted spelling of arena, convitor, confisio, humerus, humidus, and some other words.

6. Short notes on synonymous words have been introduced in a large number of cases—rather with the view of defining more exactly the meaning of the word which is immediately dealt with, than of presenting anything like a complete view of this subject—which indeed would demand a volume in itself.

7. The Index of Proper Names has been largely increased; and the information given has been in many cases supplemented. See for example Ancyra, Anicius, Archias, Arernus, Artaxerxes, Asinius (Pollio), Caere, Callisthenes, Hercules, Iguvium, Oebalus, Titan, &c. In many recent Latin Dictionaries the Proper Names are incorporated in the body of the work; but this arrangement not only sacrifices the obvious advantage of classification—there being few cases in which any doubt can arise whether a given word is a Proper Name or not—but, by increasing the number of separate headings to be glanced through before the word which the student seeks is reached, adds considerably to the mechanical labour of using the book. For example, in the letter A in this Dictionary there are nearly 2000 separate headings in the first part, and nearly 1000 Proper Names, including the derivative adjectives. By the plan here followed, the number of entries to be traversed in looking out a word is greatly reduced in Part I.; while in the case of Proper Names the advantage is proportionately very much greater. Words which have passed from their original use as Proper Names to that of Common Names or Appellatives are included in Part I.

ABBREVIATIONS OF THE NAMES OF AUTHORS.

Of the two following lists, No. I. comprises the Authors whose language this Dictionary is mainly intended to explain. No. II. contains the names of Authors rarely read by young students, but whose works contain many words which are necessary to be known, in order adequately to explain the meaning of words used by Authors comprised in the first list.

A SMALLER LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

A B

A^B.

A, a, indecl. f (sc litera), oftener ā, n. The primitive Indo-European ā is in Latin, as in Greek, represented by ā, e, or ō (ā, e, o), and ā by ā, ē, or o (ā, η, ω). A has in a good many instances been retained in Latin where e has been substituted in Greek: thus mag-nus corresponds to μεγ-α-λ-ος, manu to μεν-ο, angus to εγ-κ-ς. So also a appears in Latin in some cases where o is found in Greek, as in lato beside λoυo (= λο-ω), da-re beside δο-ω, ast-utus beside ασ-τ-ος (= ασ-τος). Sometimes, however, on the other hand, we have e or o in Latin for original a, where the latter is retained in Greek, cf. mol-les with μαλ-ακ-ος, levis (= λε-γ-ος) with ε-λα-γ-ος. II. In Latin compounds a long by nature generally remains unchanged, as in de-labor, e-mano. A short by nature, followed by a labial or l, is sometimes changed to u, as in occupo (capio), insultu (salto); sometimes to i, as in in-corrumpo (rapio), prohibeo (habeo), dissiliu (salto). Before other consonants it generally becomes i, as in reticere (taere), profiteor (jafer), tecno (cano). If it is followed by two consonants, as well as preceded by one, it regularly becomes e, as in ascendo (scando), condemno (danno), perfectus (factus), infringo (frango), and contingo (tango) are not real exceptions, for in these words the n is not radical; it only nasalizes the present-stems formed from the roots frag and tag. III. Latin a, whether long or short by nature, is for the most part, represented in French, in an accented syllable, either by e, as cajal (caj), mare (me), pater (pe), nāsus (nez), amāre (amer), cārus (cher), amāre (aimer), amātus (ame), mortālis (mortel), or by i—and this chiefly, though not exclusively, before m, n or a guttural, as amo (ame), fāmis (fam), mānus (main), sānus (sain), mācer (maigre), ācer (aigre), illā (aile), clārus (clair). Sometimes it is not changed, as quāre (car), avārus (avare). A in position mostly remains unchanged, as arbor (arbre), carrās (char), carmen (charme), flamma (flamme); before c it regularly becomes ai, as factus (fait), tractus (trait). Unaccented a is commonly unchanged, as salutem (salut), parare (parer), saponem (savon); it sometimes becomes e, as caballus (cheval).

IV. As an abbreviation A = Aulus; on voting tablets A (i.e. Antiquo) denoted the rejection of a proposed law; in judicial trial A = Absolvo, therefore called by Cicero littera salutaris. In dates A = ante diem, A.U.C. = anno urbis conditae.

āb, ā, or abs, prep with abl. A is used instead of ab before most consonants, but before h as well as before vowels ab is always used. Abs occurs chiefly in compds; in Cicero's orations abs is found, but only before te. In composition, ab remains unchanged before vowels. Before m and v, it becomes ā, a-mureo, a-certo. In the perfect tenses of sum, both ab and a are found; ab-fuit, a-fuit. Before fero and figuo, ab becomes au, au-fero, au-figuo. Before p, c, q, t, abs, or the shortened form as, is used, as abs-condo, ab-tineo, as-piro.

Abbreviates. 1. The point of departure, the source and origin: 2. Separation or distance. 3. Proximity.

A, OR SPACE. 1. Implying motion from a place: me a portu praemisit, he sent me on before from the harbour, Pl. Hence with verbs of separation or removal, as abducere, mittere, discedere, etc.: paululum a sole, [to stand] a little out of the sun, Cic.: ab imis unguibus, usque ad verticem summum, from his toe nails even to his very crown, Id. II. Without the idea of motion, to designate distance, or separation, with the verbs distare, abesse, and with the particles procul, longe, etc.: non amplius pedum millibus duobus ab castris, Caes. Also, without those verbs, to denote the measure of the distance: a millibus passuum quindecim, at a distance of 15 miles, Id. III. Implying proximity; on the side of, at, on, etc., ab decumana porta, at the main entrance, Id. So, a tergo, a latere, a fronte, ab occasu, ab oriente; esp. in geog. descriptions: Gallia ab Sequanis et Helvetiis adtingit Rhenum, on the side of the S. and H., Id.: comp. C. 15.

B, OF TIME, analogous to the relations of space. 1. after, directly after: ab re divina, after the sacrifice, Pl.: a mane ad noctem usque, from morning to night, Id.: ab sole orto in multum diel, from sun-rise till late in the day, Liv. II. Fig. causam ante eum decreet, before him as judge, Cic. Hence, homines ante pedes, servants, Juv. (B) with motion equitatum omnem ante se mittit, Caes. 2. Fig.: in regard to order and preference: before (=prae): O felix una ante alias Priamida virgo, Virg. Hence, ante esse, to surpass, excel: gloria belli Gallos ante Romanos fuisse, Sall. The phrase ante omnia is used adverbially.

(iii) in discourse, firstly, in the first place: ante omnia, quid sit rhetoricæ, Quint. II. In time (the more usual meaning), before: ante noctem, Hor: jam ante Socratem, even before the time of Socrates, Cic: ante has meas literas, before the receipt of this letter, id. So with perf. part. ante decemviro creatos, before their appointment, Liv.

2. Particular phrases. (i.) ante tempus, before the right time: ante tempus excitatis suis, id.: before the fixed or lawful time: factus est consul bis, primum ante tempus, before the time fixed by the law (v. annalis). Cic. (ii) ante diem, poet.: before the usual time, before the time destined by fate, Ov. (iii) ante diem (abbrev. a. d.) and an ordinal number are used to denote the day of the month; where the prep. causes the Abl. of time to be changed into an acc., as if the word depended upon the prep. Hence, in translating such phrases, diem must be translated by on the day, and the prep. ante be transferred to the following acc.: a. d. IV. Id. Mart. (i.e. ante diem quartum Idus Martias) on the 4th day before the Ides of March, i.e. the 12th of March, Liv. As in this constr., the phrase ante diem was considered as one word, it is often found after the prep. in or ex: caedem to optimatum contulisse in ante diem V. Kal. Nov., had postponed it to the 23th Oct., Cic.

B. Used without a case, or adverbially: 1. In space (a) without motion: in front: ab tergo, ante circum, behind, in front and around. Liv. (B) with motion, forwards: ingressi non ante sed retro, not forwards, but backwards, Cic. II. With adverbial Abl. multo, paulo, tanto, aliquanto (more rarely multum and paulum): multo ante prospexi tempestatem futuram, long before, Cic: permultum ante certior factus eram literis, id.

2. With quom (when the two words come together, they are frequently joined, making what is sometimes called the conjunction antequam), sooner than, before: ut ante videret quam e vita discederet, before he died, id.: antequam de incommodis Siciliae dico, id. 3. In place of an adv (Gr. constr.: rare): neque enim ignari sumus ante malorum (ἄντ' ὀπίσθ' κακῶν), of previous calamities, Virg.

C. In composition with verbs, before, in place, time and rank: e.g.: antecapere, antecedere, antefigere, anteferre, antestare, antepone. In designations of time often with adv, and adv: e.g.: antelucanus, antemeridianus, antehac. Ant sometimes appears as anti, e.g. antepare: and sometimes with the suffix a, anted or antid. [Cogn. with Gr. ἀντ', ἀντα, over against, before: Germ. ant-, in Ant-wort, A-S and- in Eng. an-swer.] (Hence Ital. anzi.)

at or ast, conj. (the latter, q. v., is used by the poets, and by Cicero in his letters. For the sake of euphony sometimes written ad). At denotes transition of thought, and in most cases adds something, the effect of which is to diminish or destroy the force of what has been admitted: sed is a word of opposition, at a word of addition: at is always at the beginning of a sentence or clause. I. Mere transition (freq. with a limiting meaning): but, yet: conminus gladius pugnatum est: at Germani, celeriter phalange facta, impetus gladium exceperunt, Caes. Hence at frequently occurs at the beginning of the subdivisions of works, as the books of the Aeneid, Ovid's Metamorphoses, etc., in which cases it serves to indicate a close connection, yet by way of contrast, between the end of the preceding division and the beginning of the new one, e. g.: talibus exemplis monitae nova sacra frequentant, turque dant, sanctasque colunt Ismenides aras (last two lines of Ov. M. 3). at non Alcithoe Minyelas origa censeat accipienda (the commencement of next book).

2, sudden transition to a new circumstance or idea: esp. in emphatic or impassioned style: conspurgit Turnus in enssem et ferrum. At perfidus ensis frangitur in medio, but, lo! Virg. Hence in appeals and exclamations: at tu nauta, vagae ne parce malignae arcae ossibus et capiti inhumato particulam dare, but do not, I pray, Hor. And in rhetorical expressions: at credo mea iunonia tandem fessa jacent, but, no doubt! Virg. Sometimes at is found at the very commencement of a vehement speech as, at o Iteorum quicquid . . . where it implies a sudden outburst of passion: o but, all ye gods . . . Hor.

II, In adding something opposed to what has been previously mentioned: but, but then, but on the other hand: nefarius Hippasus Pisistrati filius arma contra patriam ferens: at Sulla, at Marius, at Cinnia recte, immo iure fortasse, but, on the other hand, Cic. Cingetorix, simul atque de Caesaris adventu cognitum est, ad eum venit. At Indutimarius bellum parare instituit, on the contrary, Caes. Strengthened with pol, edepol, hie, etc. Ille Gaudio ero vobis. Ad At edepol nos voluptati tibi, nay, on the contrary, faith, Pl. With contra, e contrario, potius, etiam, vero, etc. (Cornutus) tacido curarum mortem in se festinavit: at contra reus nihil infracto animo, quaterque vincula. Tac.: etiam sunt, Quirites, qui dicant, a me in exilium ejectionem esse Catiulinam, but, there are actually people who say, Cic.

2, In anticipating an objection at may be translated, but it may be said, but it may be objected: at memoria immutur, but (it will be said) the memory fails, Cic. and in introducing the answer to an objection, by why: quid porro quacundum est? Facitumne sit? At constat, why, that is agreed on all hands, id. 3, With enim, to state a reason for an objection: but certainly, but indeed, etc. at enim nimis hic longo sermone utimur; diem conficimus, but really, Pl. And in questions: at enim cur a me potissimum hoc praesidium petiverunt? but, it will be asked, Cic. 4.

After a condition or concession expressed by si, etiamsi, etsi, etc., yet, still, at least: liceat haec nobis, si oblivisci non possumus, at tace, id.

5. Sometimes in sudden transitions—immo vero, sed... non est, inquit, in parietibus res publica. At in aris et focis, yes, but it is, etc., Cic.

âtât or attat, also several times repeated attatata, attatataste, or attate, attate, etc., interj. An exclamation of joy, pain, wonder, fright, warning, etc.: oh! ah! alas! to! strange! etc.: Pl.: Ter.

ât-âvus, i. m. the father of a great-grandfather (abavus), or great-grandmother (abavia), opp. to adnepos. II. Meton. like avus, abavus, etc.: ancestor, forefather. Turnus avis atavisque potens, Virg. Maecenas, atavis edite regibus, Hor. [The at appears to be the same with Skr. atî (ultra, nimis) = Gr. êrî, Lat. et.]

mus, i. f. = ἄτομος, an indivisible element, an atom: of these âtôms, all things, acc. to the doctrine of Democritus, are composed, Cic.

atque or ac (the latter in class. prose usu. only before consonants), conj. (from adque, which form sometimes occurs in MSS. and inscriptions) a copulative particle, denoting a closer connection than is implied by et, and also, and besides, and even, and.

With simul: Britannorum acies in speciem simul ac terrore editoribus locis constiterat, at once to make a show and to inspire terror, Tac. 2.

Hence its use in Hendiadys: isto animo atque virtute, with that virtuous feeling, Cic.: de complexu ejus atque sinu, id. 3. In adding a more important word. and indeed, and even: magna diis immortalibus habenda est gratia atque hunc ipsi Jovi Statori, and in particular, id. hebeti ingenio atque nullo, of dull intellect (and) in fact none at all, id. In this sense sometimes strengthened by adeo: non petentem atque adeo etiam adversentem, and in fact, Liv. With etiam: id jam populare atque etiam plausible factum est, Cic. With the pron. hic, i. e. maximis defixis trabibus atque eis praecutitis, and these, too, sharpened at the extremity, Caes. 4. Poet. to introduce an abrupt statement: and instantly, and lo: vir gregis ipse caper deeraverat. atque ego Daphnin aspicio, when lo! I spy Pl., Virg. II. In comparisons.

1. With par, idem, item, aequus, similis, juxta, talis, totidem, etc., as: neque enim mihi par ratio cum Lucilio est ac tecum fuit, not the same as it was with you, Cic.: pariter patribus ac plebi carus, Liv. 2. With alius, distinctus, contra, contrarius, versus, etc.

than, to, from: illi sunt alio ingenio atque tu, different from you, Pl.: contrario motu atque caelum (veratur), in an opposite direction to, Cic. Sometimes in both cases (1, 2) with ut or si: quod iste aliter atque ut edixerat decrevisset, otherwise than as he had announced, id.: aequa a te peto ac si mea negotia essent, as much as if, id.

auspex, icis, c. [contr. of *avispe*x, from avis and specio: cf. angur.] Lit.: a bird-seer, one who observes the flight, singing, or feeding of birds, and from thence predicts future events; an augur, soothsayer. (Cf. Later, of the birds observed for such purposes, ominous, prophetic: (galli gallinacei) victoriarum omnium auspices, Pl. 2. the person who witnessed the marriage ceremony, and who in ancient times took the auspices at the ceremony: nubis genero socrus nullis auspibus, nullis auctoribus, without due religious sanction, Cic. (v. Smith's Ant. s. v.) II. an author, leader, etc.: avis auspibus, under the sanction of the gods, Virg.: auspice Teucro, Hor.

auspicato, adv after taking the auspices (cf. augurato), Cic.

auspicatus, a, um, Part. [auspicio] consecrated by auguries: auspicato in loco, Cic. 2. fortunate, favourable, auspicious: ominibus, Vell.: non auspicatus, inauspicious, Hor.

auspicium, ii, n. [auspex]. Lit.: a bird-seeing, a bird-watching: divinatione from birds, auspices: Cic.: Liv. The auspices were divided into magna or majora, and minora: the former were possessed by dictators, consuls, censors, and praetors: the latter by curule aediles and quaestors. Magistrates, on their entrance upon office, received the auspices: while their office lasted, they were said, habere auspicia (Cic.: Liv.), i.e. to have the right of taking the auspices; and at the expiration of their office, they laid them down. (v. Smith's Ant. s. v.) In war the commander-in-chief alone had the right of taking the auspices: ductu auspicioque alius res gerere, Liv. Hence, in eton. for the chief command: tuis auspibus totum confecta duella per orbem, under your command, or auspices, Hor. And in gen. right, power, will: meis auspibus, according to my own pleasure, Virg.

II. In gen.: a sign, omen, a divine pronouncement or token: optimum, a highly favourable omen, Cic. Poet.: cui (diviti) si vitiosa libido fecerit auspicium, should give him the token or hint, Hor.

auspicio, i. v. a. (for auspicio) to take the auspices: auspicare, mustelam, to accept it as an augury, Pl.

auspicio, atus, i. v. dep. [auspicio] to take the auspices: Gracchus quum pomerium transiret, auspiciari esse oblitus, Cic.: Liv. Ep.: auspicandi gratia tribunal ingredi, Tac. Hence, with Acc., to begin, enter upon a thing: multitum, Suet.

ausus, a, um, Part. [audio]. aut, conj. or: Introduces an alternative regarded objectively as a fact: vel from volo, an alternative, viewed as still to be chosen, and dependent on the will; that is, considered subjectively. Hence in many cases either aut or vel may be used, according to the point of view from which the subject is regarded: e.g. satī esse causae arbitratū quare in Dumnorigem aut ipse animadverteret, aut civitatem animadvertere iuberet, Caes.: here Caesar contemplates the alternatives as hypothetical cases. Petit ut vel ipse de eo statuatur, vel civitatem statuere iubeat, ib.: in this passage the same alternatives are stated, but from a different point of view, viz., as left to the choice of Livitacus. Aut (often aut . . . aut, either . . . or) introduces an alternative the acceptance of which implies the rejection of the other; but whether the co-existence of the alternatives is possible or not is indicated by the context: truncas arborum aut adiutium frimis ramis abscisis, trunks of trees or very stout branches, Caes.

2. To introduce a new alternative, supposing the first to fail, or else (cf. Thouquin) redduc uxorem, aut quam ob rem non opus sit cedere, or else, tell me why, Ter. Cic. omnia bene sunt ei dicenda, qui hoc se posse profiteri, aut eloquentiae nomen persequendum est, or else he must give up, etc., Cic. So even in the case of two disjunctive phrases, res ipsa et republicae tempus aut me ipsum, quod nolui, aut alium quoniam aut invitabit aut dehortabitur, id. 3. In negative clauses, repeated ne aut ille alserit, aut usquam ceciderit aut periret aliquid, Ter. 4. In interrogations (quite exceptional) quaevisit num ille aut ille defensus esset, Cic. III. In a limiting sense, to subjoin something less important, or at least: submersas obre puppes, aut averse auras, Virg.: quaevo, num in iuste aut inprobe fecerit, or at least wrongly, Cic.

IV. Only in the poets, neque . . . aut, sometimes takes the place of neque . . . neque neque ego hanc abscondere furto speravi, ne finge, fugath: nec coniugis unquam praetendi taedas, aut haec in foedera venit, nug have I, etc., Virg.

V. The poet connects by aut . . . vel, vel . . . aut, instead of aut . . . aut, or vel t. vel (in prose writers the two particles are never connected). tellus aut huc, vel . . . Ov. VI. In connection with other particles: 1. aut etiam: quid ergo aut hunc prohibet, aut etiam Xenocratem, or even X., Cic. 2. aut certe, or at least, id.

3. aut vero for connecting a more important thought: or indeed, or truly: quem tibi aut hominem, aut vero deum, auxilio futurum putas? aye, or what god? id. 4. aut ne . . . quidem: ego jam aut rem, aut ne spem quidem expecto, either good news, or else not even the hope of it, id. (Hence Ital. o. Fr. ou.)

autem, conj. (never used at the beginning of a clause): again, moreover: unum (iter) angustum et difficile erat: mons autem altissimus impendebat, Caes. 2. More frequently marks a more or less emphatic contrast on the other hand, but: ipse nihil scribo; lego autem libentissime, but I do read, and with the greatest pleasure, Cic. II. When a word is repeated from a previous clause, in continuing a train of thought: now, well but, well then: nunc quod agitur, agamus: agitur autem, libere vivamus, aut mortem obeamus, id. III. In connecting a parenthetical clause: quod vitium effugere qui volet (omnes autem velle debent), etc., and surely all ought, etc., id. IV. In arguments, to indicate the steps by which the conclusion is reached: now, well but: aut hoc, aut illud: hoc autem, non igitur illud. Itemque: aut hoc, aut illud non autem hoc: illud igitur, id. V.

In putting an emphatic question: indeed, forsooth. Th. Ego non tangam meam? Ch. Tuam autem, furcifer? thine, why, how so? Ter. Esp. where a correction is made: num quis testis Postumum appellavit? testis autem? num accusator? witness did I say? Cic. VI. In the poets, sed and autem are connected in interrogations: sed quid ego haec autem nequidquam migrata revolve? but . . . however, Virg. VII. To denote a sudden transition: ecce autem subitum divortium, when lo! Cic. (cf. aut and Gr. αὐτός, αὐτράπ.)

B. b, indeed n., the soft, or sonant, labial, corresponding to the hard, or surd, p, etc. The Romans probably gave the sound p in many cases where they wrote b, especially when the b was final, as in ah, ob, sul, before p or t, or when those preps were used in comp., before the same letters, when no assimilation took place in writing. Quintilian says "quum dico obtulit, secundum b litteram ratio poscit, aures magis audiunt p" so sometimes scribitur is found instead of scriptus. Hence we find variations between bs and ps: cf. Aspurgus and Asprurgus, opsonium and obsonium; gen., however, the Gr. φ was rendered by ps. II. Whether b (at least as an initial sound) existed in the original Indo-European tongue, has been disputed, in consequence of the difficulty of tracing the sound through cognate words in the several branches of that family of languages. Latin initial b corresponds in only a few words to Greek β, as in balbus (βαλβος), ballo (βαλ-χῆ), bos (βοῖς), bulo (βαῖνο, ἐ-βγ-), and in some of these it represents Indo-European g or gw. In bibulo corresponds irregularly to gw; in balanea, initial b represents φ. B in the middle of words corresponds to Indo-European bh, and therefore to Greek φ; as in albus (ἀλβός), ambo (ἄμφω), umbula (νέφος), umbilicus (ομφαλός); in a few instances it corresponds to dh, and so to Greek θ, as in ruber (ῥ-υβ-ρός), uber (ὄυθα). In words borrowed from the Greek, b sometimes represents π, as in buzus (βύζος), Burrus (Βύρρος), carbasus (κάρασσος). According to Grimm's law, p in Gothic should answer to Latin b; but no example of such correspondence is forthcoming. III. In bis, bellum, bonus, b has arisen from an earlier Latin du. In publicus (=populus), it has taken the place of p. Ferbut, from ferreo, was perhaps due to the wish to avoid the combination vu. In aspello, asporto (abs), the b is omitted; in aufero, aufugio (abf), it is changed to u. IV. Latin b most commonly remains unchanged in French, esp. at the beginnings of words, as bonus (bon), bibere (boire); but in a good many instances turns to v, as cubare (couver), ebrius (ivre), habere (avoir), probare (prouver), subinde (souvent). So also in Italian avere, provere. V. In Inscr., B generally denotes bonus or bene: thus B. D.=Bona Dea; B. M.=Bene Merenti.

babae or papae, interj.=bañi or patat, an exclamation of wonder or joy: wonderful! strange! Ter.

C, the third letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding originally in sound to the Greek Γ. The Dorian inscription gives ΛΕΓΙΟΝΙΣ for legiones; and even to the latest times C and G stood for Gaius and Gnaeus. But from an early period there was a tendency to give to C the sound of K. In inscriptions Consul is represented by the abbreviation Cos not Kos, and K was retained as a written symbol only before a, as in KAL for Kalendae and Calumnia. It is probable that, so long as Latin remained uncorrupted, C retained the hard sound of K, even before the vowels i and e. II. C in Latin corresponds to Skr. k, kh, k' or g, and regularly to Gr. κ. Sometimes where π is found in Greek, Latin, following the orig. Indo-European, has c (or q): thus coquo, πείνω; linquo, λείπω; voco, φέρος; oculi, ὀφθαλμοί. In the Germanic languages it is represented by k and sometimes, in the middle of a word, by g: cf. calamus, O. H. G. halm; cor (stem. cord-), Goth. haurt, Eng. heart; cornu, Goth. haurn, Eng. horn; socer, Goth. svaihts; decem, Goth. tahtun; nox (stem. noct-), Goth. nahts, O. H. G. naht; documa (later lacrima), Goth. tagr. III. Changes of C in French. 1. of c into ch: cf.

Lat. caballus, calidus, camera, canis, &c. with Fr. cheval, chaud, chambre, chien, etc. 2. Of c into s: cf. Lat. facinus, licere, placere, etc.: with Fr. faisons, loists, plaisir, etc. 3. Of c into g: cf. Lat. acer, macer, etc.: with Fr. aigre, maigre, &c. 4. Omission of c: (i) Between two vowels. cf. Lat. focus, jocus, nocere, etc.: with Fr. feu, jouir, nuire, &c. (ii) followed by t: cf. Lat. dictus: Fr. dit. lectus: Fr. lit. (iii) followed by r: cf. Lat. lacrima, with Fr. larme. IV. as an abbrev. c stands for Caius, and reversed, q, for Gaius. Upon voting tablets it meant condemnio. As a numeral it denotes centum.

D, d, the fourth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding, both in sound and in place, to the Greek Delta (Δ). It is the medial dental. Changes of D to other letters and v. v. 1. D to T. At the end of words it was frequently substituted for it in early times, hence some modern editors write at for ad, apud for apud, etc. This sometimes changed to d in the derivation of words: e. g. from mentior comes mendax, from quattuor, quadragesima, etc. 2. D to B. At the beginning of some words, d followed by a vowel has been changed into b: e. g.: duellum, bellum; duis, bis; duonus, bonus. In (dy) iginti, the d has been dropped. 3. D to R: e. g.: ar for ad (v. arbitr); apor for apud. 4. D to L: e. g.: dacrima, lacrima; angula, lingua; odor (ὄσμιον) oleo; so, as between Greek and Latin, δαίμων, levir. 5. In compound words, d at the end of the first portion of the compound, is generally assimilated to the initial consonant of the second portion with which it comes in contact: e. g.: ac-cedo: af-ficio; ag-gredior: al-ludo; ap-parare; ar-rigo; as-sidere. So quip-piam for quid-piam; quic-quam for quid-quam. When in such cases, d is followed by s and another consonant, it is omitted altogether: e. g. a-scendo, a-stringo. The same thing takes place when d is followed by the nasal gn: e. g.: a-gnatus, a-gnoscere. 6. In inflection, d is omitted before s, or (rarely) assimilated: e. g.: custos for custod-s; lae-si, for lae-si; but ced-si for ced-si. II. Changes of D into Z, especially di into z: e. g.: Lat. ardens, pendulus, it. arsenic, penzolo; Lat. medius, radix, it. mezzo, razzo. 2. Di into G or z: e. g.: Lat. hodie, It. oggi; Lat. dies, diurnus, Fr. jour. 3. D into L: e. g.: Lat. cicada, hedera, It. cicala, clera; Lat. cauda, Sp. cola. 4. D into R (rare): e. g.: Lat. lampas, lampadis, Sp. lampara. 5. D into N: e. g.: Lat. lampas, lampadis; It. lampana;

Lat. perduz, It. pernice. 6. Omission of D: in French, between two vowels: e. g.: Lat. audire, gladius, fides, nudus, videre, Fr. ouir, glaine, foi, nu, voir. In Italian at the end of words: e. g.: Lat. ad, apud, maior, fides, It. a, apote, mò, fe. III. In the oldest period of the Latin language, the abl. sing. ended in d: MARIN, INCTATOR, IN ALTRO MARIO, on the Col. ROSTER.

2. Several prepositions and other prefixes originally ended in d, which d was afterwards usually dropped: e. g. prod in prod-ire, prod-esse; red in red-ire, red-dere; sed in sed-itio. IV. As an abbreviation, D usually stands for the praenomen Decimus; also for Deus, Divus, Dominus, Decurio, etc.; in epithets, D M. = Dis Manibus.

N.B.—The use of the symbol D as the representative of 500 is a modern corruption: the original mark was the half of the original Tuscan numeral o or Cl = 1000, which printers have found it convenient to represent by D.

E, indecl. n. (or suband. litera) f. the fifth letter of the Latin alphabet, the second of the vowel series, corresponding to both the e and the η of the Greeks. It ordinarily represents an Indo-European ā or ā, see on letter A. I, e is substituted for a: 1. in compounds of roots which contain a long by position: e.g.: scando, descendo. It sometimes, but rarely, takes the place of ā: e.g.: grāciōr, progridior. In some cases double forms exist, the one with the substituted, the other with the original vowel: e.g. from spargo, we have both conspergo and conspargo.

2. In the reduplication of roots with a: e.g.: cādo, cēcidī; tango (root tēg-), tētigi.

3. In the perfect of some verbs which have a in the present: f. jācio, jēci; facio, feci. This is thought by some to have arisen from the contraction of reduplicated perfects, f. faci, fe(f)ci. II. e is changed into i: 1. in a few compound verbs: e.g.: spēcio, conspicio; p̄simo, imprimō but generally the e of the simple verb remains unchanged. 2. in the inflections of substantives: e.g.: nomēn, nomīnis. III. e takes the place of i:

1. in the neuter forms of adjectives in is: e.g.: faciliis, facile; similis, simile. 2. In the nom. and acc. sing. of a class of neut. substantives: e.g.: ovile (stem ovill-).

3. In the nom. forms aedes, canes, etc., for aedis, canis, etc. f. e in verbal roots is sometimes changed into o in derived substantives: e.g.: tēgo, tōga; pendo, pondus. But this change, which is a regular rule of derivation in Greek, is extremely rare in Latin. The formative suffix as (orig. as) of neuter nouns (which in the nom. has become us), sinks in the oblique cases to es; as opus (opus), operis (for opes-is). E takes the place of o also in velle from volo.

V. e is rarely found instead of u: thus from jūro are formed dejēro, and pejēro. VI. e is omitted in the inflections of many nouns, which in the nom. sing. end in ēr: e.g. matēr, matris; magistēr, magistri; pulchēr, pulchra, pulchrum.

VII. changes of E in the Romance languages. 1. e long, whether by nature or position, generally remains unchanged, as spēro, Fr. espérer; crudelis, Fr. cruel, ferrum, It. ferro, Fr. fer; terra, It. terra, Fr. terre, but sometimes changed (i) into oi in French: cf. arena, credo, with Fr. arène, crois; (ii) into i in French: cf. cera, ecclesia, tēmo, with Fr. cire, église, timon; (iii) into ei in French before n: cf. frenum, Fr. frein; plenus, Fr. plein; serenus, Fr. serein. 2. Short e is generally changed (i) into ē: cf. fel, gelu, with Fr. fiel, gelo; fel, ferus, hedera, with Fr. fiel, fiel, hierre (ii) sometimes into i: cf. deus, ego, meus, with It. dio, io, mio; decem, nego, with It. die, nier.

D. In composition ex is usually employed only before vowels and the consonants h, c, p, q, s, t; before f, the prefix becomes ef; and before the other consonants the form e is used. A few exceptions to these rules are found: e. g. epoto and epotus as well as expotus; escendo as well as exscendo; the forms ecfero, ecarti, ecfodio, are not uncommon in good MSS, and from them (not from exfero, etc.) the assimilated form proceeds. Moreover, in the compounds of roots beginning with s, the s is often elided: e. g. exscidium for excidium (from exscindo), and sometimes double forms of such compounds exist: e. g. exul, exsul, etc. But the s is more usually retained: as exasanguis, etc. II. Signification: 1. Primarily and most freq. out or forth: exeo; and in an upward direction, emineo. 2. Hence, fig. to imply change, the result being indicated by the latter element, e. g. effeminare, to change a man's disposition into that of a woman. 3. In privative sense and equivalent to the English without, or the suffix less: e. g. effrenare, elinguis. 4. To denote termination, conclusion: e. g. elugeo. 5. Intensive: e. g. emilor, exalbesco, elaboro, entor. F, the sixth letter of the Latin alphabet, occupies the same place as the digamma or vau in the Greek alphabet, which it corresponds in form, though entirely different in phonetic character. Initial f in Latin takes its rise from I. E. bh or (less frequently) from dh, sometimes irregularly from I. E. gh (which is properly represented by Latin h). Hence it corresponds to Gr. φ or θ, and sometimes to Gr. χ. Thus we have Gr. φέρω beside Lat. fero; Gr. φαίω, φῆμι, Lat. fari, fama; Gr. φενύω, Lat. fugio; Gr. φω, Lat. lux. On the other hand we have Gr. θίπ beside Lat. ferus; Gr. θύρα, Lat. fores; Gr. θερμός, Lat. formus; Gr. θω, Lat. (suff) his. And again we have Gr. χρίω beside Lat. frio; Gr. χολή, Lat. fel; Gr. χαρίς, Lat. (ad) salutem, salvatio. F occurs but little in the middle of Latin words, in which place b usually correspond to φ, as in ambo (ἀμφω), nebula (νέφος); but f, from bh, is sometimes found in the other Italian dialects, v serosa. Again, though d in the middle of Latin words is regularly found as the representative of original dh (as in ades, aidō), f, from dh, appears in rufus, which has therefore been supposed to have been borrowed from a provincial Italian dialect, the true Latin being ruber, which bears to ἐρυθρός the same relation as alber to οἰδαρ. Though f most commonly represents Gr. φ (when initial), it was phonetically different; that it was not, like φ, an aspirate, is sufficiently shown by its inability to assimilate a preceding nasal; thus, whilst in ἐμφανής the nasal is assimilated, we have in Latin not im-ficio (as we have im-petus) but in-ficio. The same thing appears from the possibility of a reduplicated f in Latin as fe-felli (beside πέ-φυ-κα). Other than nasal prefixes are assimilated by f; thus affero, thus affero, affero, disfero, effero, for ad-fero, ob-fero, dis-fero, ec-fero. II. According to Grimm's law, Latin f, from bh, corresponds to b in Gothic, and to p (or b) in Old High German; thus, Lat. frater, Goth. bróðrar, O. H. G. brüder, Lat. fagus, Goth. bōka, O. H. G. puocha, Lat. fiore, A-S. (w)ich (which goes with Gothic biunan, O. H. G. poran); whilst, when it arises from dh, it corresponds to ð in Goth and O. H. G. t, thus, Lat. foies, Goth. ðaur and Eng. door, O. H. G. tor; Lat. ferus, A-S. deor and Eng. deer, O. H. G. tiur; and, when it arises from gh, to g in Goth and O. H. G. k (or g), thus Lat. fel, Eng. gall, O. H. G. gallā. III. g, indecl. n. or, litera subavā, f. the seventh letter of the Roman alphabet, C, not G, at first represented the natural media in Latin (vid. G.).

the pronunciation of C subsequently underwent a change by which it became identical with that of K, and the new symbol G was introduced. The earliest inscription in which it is found is the epitaph of Scipio Barbatus, which is not later than 150 B.C. 2. As an initial, g, in plur. Latin words, enters into consonantal combination with l and r only, hence in roots which originally began with g the g was dropped in the classical period, thus grasses, gnatus, gnosco, gnomen, became nascor, natus, nosco, nomen, but in compounds the g often reappears, as in cognatus, ignosco, agnomen. 3. With s, g combines to form gs, e. g. the stem reg- has nom. regis, regis, greg-, grex, etc. Similarly in the perfect tenses of verbs, as rege, rexi. But sometimes the g disappears between two consonants, as in mulgro, multis. II. Latin g usually corresponds to orig. Indo-European g, and therefore to Greek γ, as in Lat. genus, Gr. γενος, Lat. ager, Gr. ἀγρός. Orig. gh (Gr. χ) is also represented in Latin by g when not initial, as in Lat. anguis, Gr. ἄνγυς, Lat. inguis, Gr. ἰνγυς, Lat. liguris, Gr. λεῖγυς. Initial g from gh appears not to be found in Latin except where the g is followed by r, as in grando, Gr. χάλαξα; gratus, Gr. χαίρω in a few words Latin g has arisen by weakening from orig. k; as in digitus, Gr. δάκτυλος, digitus, Gr. φικαρί (Att. φικαρί). III. According to Grimm's law, Latin g, from Indo-European g, corresponds to k in Gothic and to ch in Old High German; thus we have Lat. genus, beside Goth. kunt, Eng. kin, O. H. G. chind. But Lat. g, from orig. gh, corresponds to Goth. g and O. H. G. k, thus Goth. gauran, to desire, and O. H. G. kari, desire, accogn. with gratus. IV. G before a, o, u, remains unchanged in French, before e and i it sometimes becomes s or c, thus Lat. fraga (from fragum) fr frase, Lat. gingiva, fr gencive. It becomes j in jaune from Lat. galbanus, and juncus from Lat. gemma. It is sometimes omitted in French between vowels, as in mer from Lat. mare, triste from Lat. tristitia, aut from Lat. augustus. In Spanish, initial g sometimes becomes h, as in hermano from Lat. germanus, hilar from Lat. gelare.

H, h, the eighth letter of the Latin alphabet, has the place and form of the Greek Eta, which originally stood for the rough breathing. The Latin H, however, was quite different in phonetic character from the Greek spirant asper, to which it never (except in borrowed words) corresponds, and which arises from the spirants s, a, and y, while Lat h has its origin regularly from initial h (Gr ἥ), as in Lat holus, Gr ἅλῳ. Lat heri (for hesi), Gr ἡρῆς, Lat hortus, Gr ἁρτος, and sometimes from hē (Gr ἥ) as in Lat herba, compared with Gr ἡρβῆ. There was some fluctuation in the use of initial H in Latin, for hanter, holus, horus, in the Augustan age anser, ulus, crus came to be written, and on the other hand h was used where there was no etymological ground for it, as in humus for unus, humor for umor. Catullus (84, 1) notices as a Roman cockneyism the pronunciation hensidae for insidae. Alongside of words beginning with h are often found forms with f, thus we have both hordeum and fordium, hostis and fostis, haridus and furidus; in these cases the h and f arise from orig. gh. Harena was originally fasena, and this f may have arisen, as Corssen thinks, from bh. Medial h in Quis is for b from bh. In traho, veho, h (from gh) occurs at the end of a root; it must have had a strong guttural sound, or it would not have given c in trahi, vehi, tractus, occlus. The combinations th, ph, ch, to represent θ, φ, χ, in words borrowed from the Greek, were of comparatively late introduction in Latin; they rarely appear in inscriptions before c. 600; in earlier periods the Greek aspirates were represented by the corresponding tenses t, c, p; thus in the time of Plautus, tesauris, dinamica (δραματι), and even Pulpius (for Πύλπιος) were written; sometimes also φ was represented by b, as in Bruges (Εὐν) from Φρύγες. II. The letter in the Germanic languages corresponding to Lat h depends on the Indo-European source of the latter in any word; and as this is most commonly gh, the Gothic correlative is usually g, and the High-German k (or g); thus to Lat. hesternus correspond Goth. gistra (-dagis), O H G kestres; to Lat. hortus, Goth. gards, O H G kasto; to Lat. homo, Goth. guma, Germ. (brauti-) gum. III. In the Romance languages initial h is often dropped; thus from Lat. habere we have It avere, Fr. avoir; from Lat. hora, It ora, Fr. or (adv.); from Lat. homo, Fr. on; from Lat. hordeum, Fr. orge; from Lat. habere, Fr. ôter. IV. As an abbreviation H stands for heredes.

2. In HS. for sestertius, H is not the letter of that shape, but the numeral II crossed, v. sestertius.
